PLANS APPROVED FOR $27 MILLION THREE-BUILDING BIOSCIENCES PARK IN CLAYTON

County Commissioners Join Clayton Town Council in Supporting Project

CLAYTON – California-based BioRealty Inc., a developer life science and technology real estate projects, plans to invest at least $27 million in a three-building biosciences park in Clayton. A national leader in facility and capital solutions, the company plans to begin with the construction of an industrial shell building that will comprise 100,000 sq.-ft. of speculative space on a 67-acre town-owned property at the intersection of Little Creek Church and Ranch Roads in Clayton.

The Johnston County Board of Commissioners unanimously approved a building lease arrangement with BioRealty on Monday morning, as well as a performance-based Economic Development Incentive Grant (EDIG) based on ad valorem tax payments.

“Our competitive position in today’s economy hinges on having high-quality industrial properties ready for leading companies in the most impactful sectors,” said County Commission Chairman R.S. “Butch” Lawter, Jr. “BioRealty is a prestigious national name in industrial real estate, and their experts see promise in our county and our capacity to attract biomanufacturing businesses and jobs.”

The County Commissioner’s action comes after the Clayton Town Council approved a separate, but complementary EDIG at their meeting on May 15. “This project takes our life sciences sector to the next level,” said Clayton Mayor Jody McLeod. “We’re eager to partner with BioRealty and Johnston County in creating a world-class bio-manufacturing space that will complement on our community’s exceptional location, outstanding talent assets, modern infrastructure and compelling quality of life. I’m grateful to the Town of Clayton’s Economic Development Office, along with our county’s committed leadership, for their great work in ushering this exciting vision into reality.”
