OPPORTUNITY

The property at 26-01 2nd Street presents a compelling, low-maintenance investment opportunity within one of Queens' most dynamic and rapidly growing waterfront submarkets. Situated along the transforming Halletts Point peninsula in Astoria, this modern, three-family building sits in close proximity to the Astoria Ferry Landing, providing residents with a scenic and seamless commute directly into Long Island City, Roosevelt Island, and Manhattan. This unique transit-oriented location, paired with Astoria's highly desirable neighborhood lifestyle, drives consistent rental demand from young professionals and commuters.

Unlike older vintage assets, the property's 2005 construction offers a highly efficient, low-maintenance operational footprint. Featuring a practical layout of a first-floor 1-bedroom unit and two spacious 2-bedroom units on the upper floors, the building allows an investor to capture meaningful rental upside through light, targeted cosmetic updates. With New York City's multifamily vacancy rates remaining exceptionally low at approximately 2.8% and market rents continuing to rise, the macroeconomic environment strongly supports a strategic, light value-add strategy at this attractive entry basis.

The broader Astoria submarket has benefited from sustained private and public waterfront redevelopment, with neighboring mega-projects continually introducing new retail, parks, and dining options to the immediate corridor. As homeownership in New York City remains out of reach for a vast majority of the population, rental demand in premier Queens neighborhoods is expected to outpace much of the city. With thoughtful, hands-on asset management and minor unit refreshes, 26-01 2nd Street offers a stable, high-yielding asset poised to generate enhanced cash flow and steady long-term equity growth.

NEIGHBORHOOD OVERVIEW

Situated along the East River waterfront in Astoria, Queens, 26-01, 26-03, and 26-05 2nd Street sit within one of New York City’s oldest and most distinctive neighborhoods. Originally settled as Hallet’s Cove and incorporated as Astoria Village in 1839, the area evolved through waves of German, Irish, Italian, and Greek immigration into the richly layered community still known today as “Little Athens.” The immediate blocks reflect this waterfront character, with the three-family residences—built in 2005—just steps from Astoria Park, home to the city’s oldest and largest public pool, and the East River esplanade’s sweeping Manhattan skyline views.

Astoria has undergone a significant renaissance in recent decades, with waterfront developments like Halletts Point bringing new residential density alongside the neighborhood’s enduring stock of rowhouses and low-rise multifamily buildings, all while remaining well below Manhattan pricing. The area is anchored by 30th Avenue’s celebrated dining corridor and cultural institutions including the Museum of the Moving Image and Socrates Sculpture Park. With direct access to the N and W subway lines and NYC Ferry service to Manhattan, the neighborhood’s blend of old-world character and waterfront revival makes it one of Queens’ most compelling residential corridors.
