Naples Industrial Market

SUPPLY CONSTRAINTS AND STRONG ABSORPTION

LOW VACANCY ENVIRONMENT

The Naples industrial submarket remains one of the tightest in Florida. As of Q3 2024, vacancy stood at 1.5% marking over three consecutive years below 2%. This reflects exceptionally limited availability for small-bay and mid-bay product, which comprise much of the local inventory. Regionally, the broader Southwest Florida market recorded a 6.1% vacancy rate in Q2 2025, an increase from prior years due to recent deliveries, but still competitive compared to national averages.

LIMITED SUPPLY PIPELINE

Naples faces ongoing supply constraints due to high land costs, restrictive zoning, and the scarcity of developable parcels. While the wider Southwest Florida region has experienced a wave of speculative construction, Naples itself saw minimal new deliveries in 2024, keeping submarket fundamentals tight.

RENTAL RATE GROWTH

Average asking rents in Naples reached $20.22/SF NNN in Q3 2024, supported by persistent demand and limited availability. While rent growth has moderated from peak levels, landlords continue to command premium rates, particularly for small-bay industrial/flex product.

TENANT DEMAND TRENDS

Demand remains driven by service-oriented businesses, trade contractors, automotive service providers, and specialty manufacturers, sectors that align closely with the subject property's tenant mix. This composition provides insulation from volatility in any single industry segment.

WEALTH DEMOGRAPHICS

Naples ranks among the wealthiest metro areas in the U.S. with a large proportion of residents owning high-value homes and vehicles, creating steady demand for high-quality maintenance, detailing, and customization services. The influx of retirees and seasonal residents has also spurred continuous investment in residential development and related service trades.

LABOR FORCE & EMPLOYMENT
