OLD MINING TOWN NORTH OF TUCSON

FOR SALE

San Manuel, Arizona, is a small town in the foothills of the Santa Catalina Mountains, renowned for its stunning mountain views and rich mining history. At about 3,500 feet, the mild climate offers excellent conditions for outdoor activities such as hiking and biking. Conveniently located near Tucson, residents and visitors have nearby access to city amenities.

Founded in 1953 to house workers of the San Manuel copper mine, mill, and smelter, the town has a population of 3,535 and enjoys picturesque mountain and desert views. Since the mine closed in 1999, San Manuel has become a popular destination for hunting, hiking, biking, and sightseeing. Some have speculated that an increased reliance on renewable energies may bring a heightened demand for copper, which could possibly initiate reopening what was previously the largest copper mine in North America and reinvigorate the town.
