REDEVELOPMENT HISTORY

491 Dutton Street in Lowell, Massachusetts represents a thoughtful redevelopment of a historic 1880 textile mill into a modern mixed-use property.

Following the closure of the American Textile History Museum in 2016, the building was repositioned to include 65 residential condominiums along with the Kitson Business Center, introducing a mix of office and retail space.

LOCATION DESCRIPTION

Its location directly across from the Lowell Justice Center has made it particularly attractive to legal and professional tenants, driving strong occupancy and demand.

Throughout the redevelopment, care was taken to preserve the building's historic character, with original elements and artifacts incorporated into the design. Today, 491 Dutton stands as a cornerstone of Lowell's ongoing revitalization—successfully blending historic architecture with modern urban living and business use.
