BEACON DINER

1941 PARAMOUNT, REMODELED

Routes 54 and 309, Hometown

For those familiar with Route 309, the Beacon Diner is synonymous with Hometown. It's hard to tell Hometown from Hazleton or Tamaqua, but there's no missing the Beacon, set back and slanted to the corner of Routes 309 and 54 for maximum visibility. To the uninitiated, the beige, stuccoed building with the cedar shake mansard appears to be like any other roadside restaurant, but a few telltale signs mark the Beacon as a genuine diner. The restaurant's dimensions, window spacing, and pylonlike, metal-box sign on the road proclaiming The Beacon in neon obviously predate the building's environmental style. The curved glass-block corners not only hint at a diner pedigree, but they tag it as a Paramount.

The Beacon is in fact the last prewar diner brought to the Anthracite Region that still stands. It was trucked to the site in two 60-by-14-foot sections and pushed onto a predug, stone-walled foundation. On May 28, 1941, Ernest Taylor opened the diner.

By the time the Beacon was remodeled in 1969, stainless steel was passé, so the owners embraced environmentalism: woodgrain table tops, diagonal plank counterbase, and spindle-top booth dividers in the dining room.

Control of the diner passed on to George E. Taylor, Ernest's son. In 1982, he bought the Route 443 Diner in nearby Lehighton. That diner had been moved near the junction of Routes 443 and 209 in the early 1960s and then was remodeled in 1968. It now operates as the Beacon 443.

The menus at both Beacons are large and eclectic: seafood, steaks, chops, Cajun food, and, especially, Greek food. Being Greeks themselves,
