MARKET OVERVIEW

The Farmington, New Mexico market serves as a vital commercial center for northwestern New Mexico and the broader Four Corners region. The city's economy has historically been driven by the production of petroleum, natural gas, and coal, and it continues to function as a significant retail hub for surrounding rural communities and neighboring reservations.

The city is home to San Juan College, which provides higher education and workforce training. Outdoor recreation and tourism are also emerging as target industries, capitalizing on the region's climate and natural landscapes.
